BVN Reporter Wins RPD Complaint

The Black Voice News

RIVERSIDE

By Cheryl Brown

Mary Shelton, a Black Voice News reporter, is relieved and surprised that the City of Riverside sustained her complaint against RPD Officer Chris Lanzillo. Shelton filed a police complaint against officer Lanzillo, accusing him of blocking her from crossing the street and shouting at her on May 7, 2003.

According to her statement, she said it was approximately 8:45 p.m. when she was walking home from a Shell convenience station. When she saw Lanzillo in the station she walked around the squad car. The signal light was red but as the light changed to green, seeing the squad car turning to her left, she stood to let it go by. Instead the car stopped blocking her in the pedestrian zone and Lanzillo yelled angrily, "you better write the truth in your rag sometime." He drove off quickly. Shelton felt intimidated by Lanzillo's actions.

Now she feels there is some justice in the system.

Shelton is well known for her cutting edge coverage of events. She has been a part of the team that covered the Tyisha Miller killing by four White officers and most recently the Steve Woodruff trial where Woodruff was convicted of the death of a police officer during a residential dispute.

According to a letter from Penelope Culbreth-Graft, DPA, Assistant City Manager, the allegation of "Discourtesy" has been "Sustained" and the member of the department, "committed all or part of the alleged acts of misconduct or poor service."

Complaints against police officers in 2001 and 2002 remained roughly at 9% sustained. Of the 288 filed in 2002 26 were founded. According to Graft's letter, the Shelton complaint had been investigated by the Riverside Police Department - Internal Affairs and reviewed by the City's Community Police Review Commission (CPRC) (instituted as a result of an Attorney General consent decree).

In response to the letter Shelton said, "I was relieved and surprised to learn that the city of Riverside has sustained

Sharon Davis with Councilwoman Sue Lien and husband Assemblymember John Longville

The Black Voice News

SAN BERNARDINO

The polls are shifting and Sharon Davis, first lady of California came to San Bernardino to see that the pendulum swings the other way. In the latest poll taken by the LA Times of likely voters, 55% to 45% are in favor of the recall.

Davis was very clear as she called the recall attempt against her husband, "a Republican attempt to hijack." She did not mince words. "They couldn't beat Bill Clinton (with the impeachment), they couldn't win the national election so they stopped the vote count in Florida. They started 30 days after Gray was re-elected Governor. They don't like the outcomes so they try to change it. We're not going to let the Republicans steal this election!" she said to a responsive crowd. "We are not going to fall for the 'big lie' that is say something long enough and it will become the truth," she said to the delight of the Democratic crowd. "Compassionate? He (Bush) promised Leave No Child Behind and put no money behind it. He (Bush) has lost hundreds of thousands of jobs but Gray Davis created 800,000 jobs. We are not going to stand back and let them lie," she said.

Davis was the most high profile of all the speakers with the exception of Congressman Joe Baca who explained the deficit in California is from former Governor Pete Wilson's deregulation of the utilities. "They (Republican) convinced us in a bi partisan way, we voted for it (deregulation). The state was to benefit but Texas is the one who benefited. We have never been reimbursed. The President (Bush) has never given us the money we should have," said Baca.

He said the Vehicle License Fee has a "trigger" in the legislation passed by the legislature, (including Republicans) that says, if there is a deficit (the tax) will kick in. It is the law and he (Davis) has to apply the law," said Baca.

All of the Democrats were in line with the same message.

Walter Hawkins, Rialto School Board Trustee and candidate for the 67th Assembly District said, "once people wake up and see the game that is being played they will vote against the recall. I plan to get out the vote in our area. We have to make our own reality. We will get people to the polls early. One thing we need is places to volunteer to be polling places and volunteers to work them."

Hattie Inge, a longtime Democrat said she agrees with Sharon Davis, "She is absolutely right. We must vote and encourage others not just talk about it." Inge a citizen of Rialto said this recall is a ploy to divide Democrats.

Assemblyman John Longville focused on how Republicans find creative ways to show they are sore losers. "They have raised it (sore loser) to an art form. There are more millionaires per capita in California than anywhere else. We have 1/5 of the world's billionaires."

One thing he wanted Californians to know is that the state legislature will not have a situation as Florida where every vote was not counted. "You have the right to vote and the right to have your vote counted. They have to count the votes by law in California," he said.

Grace Vargas, Mayor of Rialto said, "it (the recall) is a circus. People don't know all of the story many times we have to take over what someone else did or didn't do." In reference to the mess Pete Wilson's administration left.

"Say no to the recall and yes to Bustamante," said most of the Democrats from the area and Davis agreed and added, "say no to Proposition 54 the Race Initiative. We won't even be able to do a Census if Prop 54 passes. It is a wedge issue."

James G. Muhammad,
the highly-respected editor of the Nation of Islam's newspaper, "The Final Call," has lost his job for mishandling a story that erroneously implicated Jesse L. Jackson Sr. and Samuel "Billy" Kyles in the assassination of Dr.

Martin Luther King Jr. Muhammad offered his resignation to Minister Louis Farrakhan last week and the minister accepted it, according to Nation of Islam (NOI) officials.

The "Final Call" made a front-page retraction in its Aug. 26 edition, apologizing for a story in the previous week's issue alleging that the King family had implicated Jackson and Kyles, two Baptist ministers and well-known

Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) activists, in the 1968 assassination of their leader.

The original story carried the double byline of Eric Ture Muhammad and

Donna Muhammad. It read, "On April 8, 1998, Mrs. Coretta Scott King, her son Dexter King, Rev. Walter E. Fauntroy and former UN Ambassador Andrew Young met with then-U.S. Attorney

General Janet Reno for two-and-a-half hours. They demanded a new federal investigation into the King assassination based on new evidence that had come to their attention. The family alleges that the Reverends Jesse L. Jackson and Samuel Billy Kyles are complicit in the assassination of Dr. King."

The "Final Call" retracted the comment attributed to the King family, noting

When the author pinned the words to the song "Tall Oak Tree" it is for certain he had not seen the Sequoia trees in the Sequoia National Park. Now my editorial is not about the Sequoia trees even though they are majestic and beautiful enough to talk about forever. I am going to talk about a group of Black men that were there one hundred years ago with the responsibility to care for the trees and what they accomplished. The name of one was Colonel Charles Young and others went by the name of the Buffalo Soldiers. The year was 1903 when Captain Charles Young, at the time, was appointed the Superintendent of Sequoia and General Grant National Parks, the first Black man to ever hold such an appointment. It was Young and the Buffalo Soldiers task to develop and protect a new national park that had no roads to its main destination, the giant forest. They did that and more. When Young and the Buffalo Soldiers left after his summer appointment was completed the roads, the same ones we ride on today, were complete. A task that is still unmatched today. They did more in the months they were there than all others assigned there before them combined. As is stated in the Sequoia National Parks newsletter: "This was not the toughest challenge these men ever faced. These men were serving a country that had yet to live up to the ideal of the Gettysburg Address, that all men were created equal." Young was the third African American to ever graduate from West Point and was born in slavery. After graduating from West Point U. S. Military Academy it is recorded that he said, "the worst he could wish for an enemy would be to make him a Black man and send him to West Point".

Now this man, Colonel Young as the commander in charge of the 9th Cavalry, did great things and accomplished much under horrendous odds. Yet when it came time for someone to honor him by naming a Sequoia Tree after him he turned it down and said let us name it after Booker T. Washington. Why is that so important today to me, and the descendants of the Young and Washington families? This history was lost for one hundred years and due to the diligent research effort of Dr. Floyd Thomas of the National Afro American Museum in Wilberforce, Ohio, many family members from both sides gathered at the Sequoia tree named after Booker T. Washington to begin the beginning all over again with a new sign. Here was the grand, great grand and great great-grand children of these giants among men. Their history and accomplishments stood as tall as the Great Sequoias. There were hugs and kisses from the Young to Washington family members. The pride was worn on the shoulders of the current National Park Service's racially diverse staff as they were attentive to everyone's needs. Just like the windy element could not destroy the Sequoia which has been recorded to have lived over three thousand years the family members and the National Park Service invite you all to come until the end of time. And although the Park Service does not name trees anymore the current Deputy Director announced they have commissioned the current Superintendent to select an appropriate tree to be named after Colonel Charles Young.

Dennis Archer and Black America's Pioneer Generation

Early August, indelibly separated now by the great power failure that hit much of the Northeast and Midwest, seems in some ways a long time ago. But something happened in this month's early days that should not be overlooked.

Dennis W. Archer, the former Mayor of Detroit and a former Associate Justice of the Michigan Supreme Court, was elected president of the American Bar Association.

Archer's election as the first African-American to head the prestigious ABA is of great symbolic and substantive importance for several reasons.

One has to do with its timing.

It was formally approved by delegates to the ABA convention in Chicago in the same month that will see the fortieth-anniversary commemoration of the historic March on Washington of 1963. Further, Archer will preside over the ABA during much of 2004—the fiftieth anniversary of the watershed United States Supreme Court decision in the Brown school desegregation case.

In that regard, Archer's election is a reminder that, for all the progress made since the 1950s and 1960s, the numerous "firsts" yet left for African Americans to achieve at both the high and middle levels of American society indicate how substantial the "equality gap" remains between Black America and White America. Black America is still in its "pioneer generation" mode.

Dennis Archer's election also underscores African Americans' unstinting allegiance to the belief that the principles of the Constitution and the ideal of the rule of law have meaning and can be used to produce justice and right great systemic wrongs. With extraordinary patience Blacks held that belief through the era of Slavery and of the equally unjust Jim Crow decades which followed.

Finally, Dennis Archer's personal story offers an inspiring example of the broad societal benefits to throwing open the gates of opportunity.

Born in Detroit and raised in nearby Cassiopolis, Archer worked his way through college at Western Michigan University, and then taught learning-disabled children in the Detroit public schools while earning his law degree from Detroit College of Law in 1970.

For more than a decade thereafter he mixed teaching law at his alma mater and at Wayne State University Law School with a prominent private practice and important service to the broader legal community. That included serving as president of the Wolverine Bar Association in 1979-1980, president of the National Bar Association in 1983-1984, and president of the State Bar of Michigan in 1984-85.

In 1985 Michigan Governor James Blanchard appointed Archer an Associate Justice of the state's Supreme Court; he won election to an eight-year term on his own the following year. In his final year on the bench the Michigan Lawyers Weekly named him the state's most respected judge.

Archer then campaigned for and won election to two four-year terms as Mayor of Detroit from 1994 to 2001, returning to private law practice while serving a term in 2001 as president of the National League of Cities.

This is an amazing record of achievement. But it's even more important that we recognize what fueled it: Dennis Archer's determination to contribute to the larger civic good.

One may say that it's not all that surprising an African American of Archer's generation would be so civic-minded.

After all, when he was coming of age, the battle to gain for Blacks the formal civil rights the ideal of America had long promised was reaching its zenith; and people from all walks of life—from a great lawyer like Thurgood Marshall to the Mississippi activist Fannie Lou Hamer, whose formal education reached only the eighth grade but who possessed the quality of greatness in abundance—were proving that everyone could make a contribution.

But, in fact, it goes deeper than that. Dennis Archer, like many of his contemporaries, recognized that it was his responsibility to contribute to the common good.

And it is our responsibility to continually remind—and inspire—today's generation of African Americans and other Americans to follow examples of civic engagement like his; for without such selflessness Black Americans will never be able to close the several "equality gaps" that still separate them as a group from full participation in the mainstream of American society.

Of course, the most fundamental weapon of civic empowerment has always been the right to vote. But, sadly, too many Americans, including African Americans, still don't get it—the nation's overall voter participation hovers around 50%. When we don't vote and don't participate in the civic life of our community, we're only hurting ourselves.

That's why I promised at our recent annual conference that the National Urban League would take a new, active role in registering people to vote and encouraging them to vote. We'll never cross the line and tell people for whom to vote, but being non-partisan doesn't mean being naïve. We can't afford to pretend that political events do not affect the work that we do or the people we care about.

That would be the height of civic irresponsibility.

Instead, we're going to follow the example of Dennis W. Archer and carry on the work of Black America's pioneer generation.

Children of Prisoners-Are We Punishing the Children Too?

When you think about prisons, preschoolers don't usually come to mind. But a growing number of children of all ages are finding that prison has become part of their everyday world. That's because the number of children with parents in correctional facilities is growing at an alarming rate. The U.S. Department of Justice reports that close to 1.5 million children—nearly one-quarter under five—had a parent in state or federal prison in 1999. The number of children with parents in prison grew by 60 percent or more than 500,000 children since 1991. Hispanic children were three times and Black children were nine times more likely than White children to have a parent in prison.

The growing numbers of children with mothers in prison is especially troubling. Twenty-five years ago, the Children's Defense Fund examined the problem of children of women prisoners in Rikers Island in one of our earliest reports, Why Punish the Children? The problem has worsened. Between 1991 and 1999, the number of children with a mother in prison nearly doubled to over 125,000. Many of these mothers are in prison for crimes related to drug or alcohol abuse. Mothers were twice as likely as fathers to have committed crimes while under the influence of cocaine-based drugs or opiates. Nearly three-fourths of the mothers in federal prisons are there for drug offenses. Mothers were also more likely than fathers to have experienced homelessness or unemployment shortly before going to prison. Since the majority of incarcerated mothers lived with their children before being sent to prison, many of their children had already been experiencing instability at home before this major upheaval.

Where do children of parents in prison go? Most often to stay with grandparents, other relatives, or friends, and if they aren't available, to foster parents and the child welfare system. Both mothers and fathers say they try to keep up communication with their children while in prison but circumstances can make this difficult. Families who do stay in touch often have to make do with phone calls and letters because distance makes visits difficult or impossible. Over 60% of parents in state prisons and nearly 85% of parents in federal prisons are being held over 100 miles away from their last residence. As a result, more than half of parents in prison say they have never had a personal visit from their children. While adults are in prison because they've made mistakes, children end up suffering too. Over half of mothers in prison and nearly three-fourths of fathers in prison have been sentenced to terms longer than five years—major portions of a child's life.

In response to this growing crisis, some communities and correctional facilities are creating innovative programs that help parents in prison maintain closer contact with their children and learn better parenting skills. Some facilities offer parenting and child development classes and other life skills training to help parents get back on their feet. Some promote literacy for both inmates and their children by tape-recording parents reading bedtime stories and giving the tapes and books to their children. Others have developed special child-friendly visiting areas within prisons where children can visit their parents, sometimes even overnight. These programs serve both generations. Parents who are able to feel connected to their children and have been taught specific ways to be better parents have a very strong incentive to continue these positive behaviors and avoid old behaviors that might send them back to prison.

And children are able to feel more secure and reassured that their parents still love and care about them.

There is a role for all of us in reaching out to these children. Faith-based and other community organizations can offer mentoring and other supports for children of incarcerated parents and sponsor activities that will promote parent-child interaction and strengthen parent-child relationships, parenting supports, and life skills training. The children's surrogate caregivers also need help and support. And we can push for alternatives to incarceration for parents convicted of non-violent offenses that encourage parent-child interaction. Having a parent in prison is not a child's fault but sometimes children end up feeling like they are being punished too.

Marian Wright Edelman is President and Founder of the Children's Defense Fund, whose mission is to Leave No Child Behind® and to ensure every child a Healthy Start, a Head Start, a Fair Start, a Safe Start, and a Moral Start in life and successful passage to adulthood with the help of caring families and communities.

Courtroom scene during slavery: Judge -- "order in the court! We are here to try the case of just how badly the slaves steal. We already know that stealing is the most frequent violation of the law charged against slaves. All we need is the accusation by Whites for slaves to be declared guilty. The plaintiffs may now state their case." Plaintiff: "Your Honor, we slaveholders are haunted by the fear of theft at all times and in all places. In harvest time we are obliged to set a strict watch over our cornfields, orchards, and melon patches. When night comes every movable article of property must be put under lock and key. Even the fowls have to all be collected together every evening as soon as it is time for them to go to roost, and then locked up in coops. The reason we came up with the derogatory name 'coon' for slaves is because, like raccoons, they forage at night, raiding chicken coops, kitchen gardens, and stored food supplies. In other words, the slave "coons" are sly night varmints too shiftless to get their own food.

Your Honor, it is really amusing to see kitchens, stables, cotton houses, and granaries all fastened with great padlocks -- and that too in the day time if not occupied. A slave cannot be trusted for a moment with the key to the granary. If a peck of corn is to be measured, it must be done under the eye of a vigilant steward. It is just so too in the department that particularly belongs to the mistress of the family. She is obliged to weigh and measure every thing that passes into the hands of the cook. In a large family, this duty is so arduous that the mistress seems to be the greatest slave. Every cupboard, closet, and drawer in those apartments to which the slaves have access are kept constantly locked. It is not even safe for the mistress to leave her work box in the drawing room unfastened. Then to sum up the whole, a family living on one of those isolated plantations must, when night comes, be all fastened up within windows and doors bolted

Did the Slaves Steal? (Part I)

and barred like a prison house. This causes us White people to feel we live in the greatest bondage. Still, colored boys gain admittance to a master's house by descending through the chimney in order to depredate and ravage the master's wines, cigars, and similar things. One boy was caught lying upon the floor in a state of intoxication from excessive champagne intake. He confessed to having done this before, calling this 'taking' from White folks which was right and proper to do. But can you believe that the slaves consider it wrong to 'steal' the property of other slaves?

The slaveowners live in constant fear for the safety of their lives and property. The propensity for stealing among the slaves is so great that even the dead are often exhumed for the purpose of securing their grave clothes. Typically, our dead are interred in every article of dress worn in life -- even to a coat and boots for a man and full dress for church for a woman. Of course, to rob the grave of its wardrobe and violate the sacredness of the tomb meets with a penalty more cruel than death itself. Obviously, our fear of being robbed of our lives is the greatest of all. When the master goes away for long periods, the mistress can trust no slave. Being unable to defend herself with fire arms in case of an attack upon her life, she must never retire at night without an axe so near her pillow that she could lay her hand upon it instantly. There have been several plots to massacre every member of the master's family. However, thanks to our truly faithful old servants, they inform us in time because they could not stand to see their master and mistress and all the children murdered. You see, your Honor, we slave holders are by no means -- with all our possessions -- the happiest people in the world. (The courtroom setting is fictitious but the main contents came from Emily Burke, "Reminiscences of Georgia" N.P.: James M. Fitch, 1850, pp151-59). Incidentally, cleverness in the 'transfer' of the master's property was much admired by the slaves and was often elevated to an artform.

my complaint against Officer Lanzillo. I felt that his lack of professionalism and failure to exercise appropriate conduct while on duty reflected poorly on an agency which is trying to move forward down a path of state-mandated reform in order for it to better protect and serve all of the residents of Riverside. It especially disturbed me that Officer Lanzillo was apparently in the position of training a newer officer at the time the misconduct occurred. I do not believe that is the appropriate way to behave in a position which requires a tremendous amount of responsibility and public trust nor should this behavior be demonstrated or taught to newer officers, who come to this agency to perform a public service, not to learn how to harass people."

What's next? Graft said, "I can only speak to the process. I send a letter to the person filing the complaint of the findings and another one to the Police Chief. It falls in the Police Department's court what happens (next). They will decide what action is appropriate. There are different levels of cases," she said.

"The officer's are protected by the Public Safety Officer's Procedural Bill of Rights Act California Government Code 33,000 and details remain confidential."

Shelton said, "through the process I learned that while there were some officers who were upset when I filed the complaint and now with its finding, others have been concerned and supportive. Still, when I see a black and white car driving down the street or parked when I walk by, I still feel some apprehension. There are still some officers who want to hold on to the old way of doing things, a way that was detrimental to many people in this city but that way is gone now and hopefully with hard work, will some day be replaced with a system that is much more positive."

nation because many persons support the NAACP through memberships. The Branch does not receive government support or corporate funding to process civil rights complaints. It is through memberships that the Branch is able to keep its doors open, purchase postage, pay for telephone, office supplies, insurance and other costs. All Officers, Executive and Standing Committee members are members who voluntarily serve in the staffing and running the local office. This effort, according to Jarman, will mark the beginning of the Branch's buildup of its membership, which is just under three hundred currently paid members, and will also increase its effectiveness.

On August 12, 2003 Membership Committee Chairperson Cheryl Brown, co-publisher of the Black Voice News, met with the Inland Empire Association of Concerned Pastors and presented information on the Branch's membership drive to the group. Most of the churches have agreed or have indicated agreement to sponsoring either the second or third Sunday in September as their day to sponsor this drive. "I also see this as a potential for a resurgence of the historical and spiritual relationship between the local church and the organization as relates to its original founding. Most persons of color in their late 40's and above will acknowledge that the church has been prominent in both the history and development of the NAACP," Brown told the clergy.

"Not only has the church been a beacon of support for the NAACP, but many grassroots community based organizations have also sustained, supported and assumed a role in the development of the NAACP and its ongoing effectiveness. Those organizations as well as public and private establishments will be encouraged to participate in this drive," she concluded.

Letters from the San Bernardino Branch of the NAACP will be mailed to the various churches and organizations requesting their support.

In connection with the membership drive the San Bernardino NAACP will also be pushing "No on Proposition 54 and No on the Recall." Voter registration is also a priority and the Branch will be partnering, teaming, and lining up with various organizations, and individual(s) in an effort to defeat Proposition 54. "On August 12, 2003, I traveled to Los Angeles to attend a Press Conference held by National Board Chairman, Julian Bond in reference to Proposition

54. A workshop by the State Conference NAACP was held after the press conference and it was determined that all NAACP Branches would unite in the effort towards defeating Proposition 54, No on the Recall, and voter registration," said President Jarman.

National President and CEO, Kweisi Mfume has also pledged to fight against Proposition 54 Ballot Initiative and spoke in San Francisco on Saturday, August 23, 2003 during a mass meeting against the initiative at the Third Baptist Church. Mfume calls Ward Connerly's Plan ill conceived and irresponsible and states that it would essentially sterilize the data on birth and death certificates, school enrollment forms and other records used in demographic and medical research.

Founded in 1909, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its half-million adult and youth members throughout the United States and the world are the premier advocates for civil rights in their communities, conducting voter mobilization and monitoring equal opportunity in the public and private sectors. The San Bernardino Branch office may be contacted at (909) 887-7411 or (909)887-7414-Fax.

that it has "no basis in fact or proof."

In another story, the paper interviewed Martin Luther King III, who said: "My family has never accused Rev. Jackson and Rev. Billy Kyles of complicity in the murder of Martin Luther King Jr."

In an interview with the NNPA News Service, Jackson said: "I don't want to respond because there's nothing to respond to. I don't know why they did what they did, but I am glad Farrakhan and Leonard [Muhammad, the Nation of Islam's chief of staff], when they saw it, knew that it was wrong and they retracted it. That's good enough."

"We have to build relationships, we have to deal with people in public life and the minister was a victim of the very same thing himself in the case of Malcolm X," says Akbar Muhammad, the minister's long-time assistant and now his international representative, based in Ghana. "And for our newspaper to follow in the footsteps of those who wanted to make him the enemy of the Black community by accusing him of being involved in the assassination of Malcolm and then we turn around and allow our paper to do the same thing to one of our brothers was unacceptable."

According to Akbar Muhammad, Minister Farrakhan spoke with Jesse Jackson and members of the King family before making his decision to accept James Muhammad's resignation.

Dr. King was assassinated as he and his top aides were preparing to leave the Lorraine Motel to have dinner in the home of Rev. Kyles, pastor of Monumental Baptist Church in Memphis.

In discussing Jesse Jackson's reaction to Dr. King's death, the "Final Call" article rekindled questions about one of the greatest mysteries of Jesse Jackson's public career—his insistence on maintaining that he was the last person to cradle Dr. King before he died.

In the most authoritative biograpphy of Jackson during that era, "Jesse Jackson: The Man, the Movement, the Myth," written by Chicago journalist Barbara Reynolds, most of King's top aides directly contradict Jackson's version of the events.

"The only person who cradled Dr. King was [Ralph] Abernathy," Hosea Williams, the head of SCLC's voter registration project, told the author. "The last man King spoke to was Solomon Jones. It's a helluva thing to capitalize on a man's death, especially one you professed to love."

Reynolds quotes Abernathy: "I am sure Reverend Jackson would not say to me that he cradled Dr. King. I am sure that Reverend Jackson would realize that I was the person who was on the balcony with Dr. King and did not leave his side until he was pronounced dead at St. Joseph's Hospital in Memphis. I am sure that he would not say to me that he even came near Dr. King after Doc was shot."

CHC Hosts First National Conference Addressing High Reliability Organization Theory and Practice

INLAND EMPIRE

Representatives from such high risk fields as the military, law enforcement, firefighting, and emergency services visited Crafton Hill College (CHC) for the first National Conference on High Reliability Organization (HRO) Theory and Practice in Medicine and Public Safety. Certain organizations function in high risk environments where error or failure results in catastrophic loss, bodily injury, or death. Some people believe that the complexity of situations contributes to these errors and failures. However, advocates of the HRO Theory believe a more intricate system, giving more people on the "front lines" the authority to make important decisions, would reduce the errors and failures within high risk environments.

According to HRO advocates, examples of organizations with complex systems which have proven to be highly reliable are certain U.S. Naval aircraft carrier flight operations, the Marine corp, the U.S. Naval submarine fleet, Naval aviation, and the air transport industry. These organizations have been termed High Reliability Organizations (HROs). Researchers have identified elements of such HROs and are experimenting with applying these elements to other fields.

The HRO Theory and Practice Conference brought together academic researchers with in-the-field practitioners from throughout the nation. One of the key elements in the High Reliability Organization (HRO) system is empowering all people within the organization to have a voice for safety in high risk situations while maintaining the command structure. HROs have flexible decision making structures; their networks do not have a fixed central player who can mistakenly assume that he/she knows everything. Based on the HRO Theory, during high tempo times, decision making migrates to expertise - It migrates up as well as down. One of the presenters at the conference was Dr. Karl E. Weick, who is a Rensis Likert Distinguished Professor of Organizational Behavior, a professor of psychology at the University of Michigan, and a consultant on wildland firefighting for the U.S. Forest service.

Weick believes that if important HRO elements had been utilized in what was an ill-fated wildland firefighting event with fatalities, the outcome would have been different.

According to Weick, common elements in HRO's include establishing good communication, encouraging people to express different points of view, eliminating a preoccupation with failure, increasing trust, being able to drop the routine if necessary, having a knowledge of the basics, being able to improvise by recombining the basics, valuing expertise and experience over rank, having ongoing situational awareness, avoiding overconfidence and avoiding being overcautious, having respect for one another, valuing honesty, and having self-respect.

One of the main conference coordinators was Dr. Daved van Stralen, instructor in critical care and general pediatrics at the Loma Linda University Department of Pediatrics. Van Stralen also serves as the medical director for Totally Kids Specialty Healthcare in Loma Linda. Van Stralen explained that those attending the conference were "practitioner advocates" for the HRO theory.

"In a simpler system than an HRO, all decisions go to a central person or a central group," van Stralen said. "But a high reliability system is a more complex system because it allows for decisions to migrate to the environmental interface, which contributes to lessening risk."

According to van Stralen, whether in firefighting, emergency medicine, or other high risk situations, "people located where the action is should be given the authority to make decisions."

Van Stralen used the recent power outage in the Northeast U.S., saying the New England area was spared the outage because an individual in the middle of the action recognized what was happening and had the knowledge and authority to make a critical decision. That person took the necessary steps to isolate the New England power grid from the larger failing power grid.

Van Stralen believes people within a system need to have the confidence to make decisions based on good training and knowing they will be supported no matter what the outcome.

"The humane theory is 'You did the right thing, we will support you,'" said van Stralen. "We understand that good actions can sometimes have bad outcomes."

"In a sense, there is no wrong decision," he said. "People on the fire front or out in the field during a medical emergency should be allowed to make risky decisions. Humans are incredibly brilliant people and we need to bring that to the front."

Another presenter was Dr. David Gaba, director of Patient Safety Center of Inquiry at Veterans Administration in Palo Alto and professor in the Department of Anesthesia of Stanford University.

According to Gaba, in the HRO theory, decentralized decision making is needed to permit prompt and flexible field-level responses to surprises. He believes that continuous training and simulations can create and maintain high-reliability operators. Also, trial and error learning from accidents can be effective and can be supplemented by anticipation and simulations. Gaba said that this is in contrast to the Normal Accident Theory where he believes denial of responsibility, faulty reporting, and reconstruction of history can obstruct learning efforts.

Gaba emphasizes that, according to the HRO theory, safety is the priority organizational objective.

Among others giving presentations at the HRO Theory National Conference were Thomas Mercer, retired U.S. Navy Admiral; Captain Anthony Hare, retired Oakland police officer and former member of the Hostage Negotiation Team; Kevin Brame, battalion chief for the Orange County Fire Authority; Joe Martin, battalion chief for the Los Angeles City Fire Department; Racquel Calderon, director of Respiratory Services at Totally Kids Specialty Healthcare; James Holbrook, department head for the Crafton Hills College Emergency Medical Services Program; Karlene Roberts, Professor at Walter A. Haas School of Business, U.C. Berkeley; and Greg Bigley, assistant professor of Management at the University of Washington Business School.

Conference coordinators were Dr. van Stralen, Gary Provansal, division chief for the Training and Safety Division of the San Bernardino County Fire Department; and Mat Fratus, division chief for the San Bernardino City Fire Department.

Sponsoring the conference were the Loma Linda University Department of Pediatrics, Totally Kids Specialty Healthcare in Loma Linda, Crafton Hills College, the San Bernardino County Fire Department, American Medical Response, the San Bernardino City Fire Department, and the Loma Linda University Department of Respiratory Services.

Parent's Back-to-School List: Include Health Check-Up for Kids

For participating in sports and bring these to the attention of your doctor. If your child has a chronic condition like diabetes or asthma, and needs to take medication during school hours, meet with the school nurse and discuss his/her needs and medical history. If your child is obese, ask your doctor about weight loss and nutritional counseling. If money is a problem, ask your health care provider about state/county sponsored low cost health plans for kids such as "Healthy Families."

IMMUNIZATIONS: Review immunization records; keep track of visits and shots. In California, children must have required immunizations before entering school or childcare. This is to prevent the spread of vaccine preventable diseases. Some diseases like tetanus, measles and hepatitis B require booster shots in later years between the ages of 11 and 18.

DENTAL CHECK-UP: Schedule an appointment with the dentist. A healthy mouth promotes smiling, better eating habits and can boost a child's self-esteem.

EXERCISE: Stress the importance of routine physical activity. Supplement the school's often less than physical PE classes with organized sports or after school activities such as karate, dance, skating and gymnastics.

EAT A BALANCED DIET: With

obesity in children near a national epidemic, make sure your child starts the year off eating a balanced diet. Plan a visit to the school cafeteria. Does the menu consist of breads, cereals and low-fat baked goods; fruits and vegetables; dairy; lean meats, poultry, fish and low-fat snacks such as pretzels and graham crackers instead of candy and potato chips; juices instead of high sugar, empty calorie sodas? If not go to plan (EB). Check out the growing list of fresh pre-packaged lunches and breakfasts available at your supermarket. Most of them are nutritionally balanced and tasty. Reminder: The new law prohibiting the sale of soft drinks on elementary school campuses and limiting them on secondary campuses takes effective this fall.

Set a good example; Practice what you Preach!

PALM DESERT

Over 5,000 women attended the God's Women's Conference this year held at the Desert Marriott in Palm Desert.

Founded 22 years ago by Charlyn Singleton, first lady of Loveland Church in Rancho Cucamonga, the event is a highlight of the Christian calendar in the Inland Empire. This year's program included: Paula White, Dr. Yvonne Capehart, Beatrice Gardner, Darlene Bishop, and many others.

Linda Johnson Jackson attended for the first time and said it gave her focus and taught her how to better her prayer life. She said she was able to meet neighbors and bond with other Christian women. "We hunger for more of God. We wanted to see God's Holy face and thirst for his word. I went one way and came back another. I learned we have to go to God in prayer boldly thanking him for our blessings even though it hasn't been manifested," said Johnson-Jackson.

She was excited about next year's conference which will take place in San Diego, at the Marriott Marina on August 25-28, 2004. For information call (909) 421-2040.

The Young And The Urban, Black America's Favorite Daytime Show, Three Decades and Going

By John Gordon
UC Staff Writer

Upon stepping on the set, I had an immediate feeling of comfort, and recognition. With the exception of the cameras, directors, producers, and grips, I was at home, my "second home" of Genoa City, which I visit, Monday through Friday when I watch the Young and the Restless. This has been my "second home" every possible weekday morning for as long as I can remember. I know things about this show, which I now know, even some of the actors have no knowledge or memory of. You now know I am an expert, like no other of this show, its storylines, and progression.

This visit enabled me to obtain a knowledge of this show that changed my thoughts and opinions of Y and R, a change both good and bad. I was first introduced to most of the African American cast, a total of seven main characters (a presence unseen on any other network). In addition, this strong seven is joined by an equally vibrant and powerful supporting cast, both

Victoria Rowell

Black and White. On a daily basis, this talented ensemble, presents to their audience positive stories of Black love, success, and offer a view to young viewers, the visions of the possibilities, so often unseen in daytime and prime-time alike.

With all of these positive African American screen images, you can imagine my surprise to find that there were very few African American employees behind the scenes (with the exception of several young African American interns and a handful of grips, script techs, and a host of other similar positions). I was introduced to no one on this day, with a position of power or influence, meaning, no writers, producers, or directors, who were African American. For this reason, I was not very surprised to learn from Victoria Rowell (Drucilla to the diehards) that she must make Drucilla a lot more "realistic." When asked if she considered herself a writer, she immediately denounced the title. I then say to Ms. Rowell, if the Y and R script was a record, as on records, if you add a riff, you get a writer credit. Ms. Rowell, you add the riff, the hook, and the background to the record of this script daily, and for that reason, accept the title of writer and own it, at least until someone who looks like you begins to write for you.

The lack of African American writers and producers was a subject that was repeated several times during this visit. With all of the talent on the stage at that moment, it quickly became evident that their one desire was to have writers who were more "in tune." They desire storytellers who know and feel the plight as well as the accomplishments of their strengths and weaknesses. For that same reason, an African American writer, could very easily debate the start of obviously "doomed" relationships, (i.e., Neil and Victoria, Brad and Olivia, and of course, "the worse de la worse" John Abbot and Mamie Johnson). Hindsight should make it apparent that African American writers would have argued this coupling to the death.

With all the confusion (to me) of the African American cast, and what seemed to be the deliberate lack of African American writers, I set off on a mission to speak with David Shaughnessy, the newly crowned, Executive Producer. (William J. Bell, the creator and former Executive Producer has taken on the less active role of Senior Executive Producer). My goal was to hear from "the boss" why this show, though so popular, with African Americans had not one writer (besides Ms. Rowell) that represented in race and in writing, a vast majority of its viewers. I was expecting some well thought out and PC response from Mr. Shaughnessy, and to my great surprise, learned that he was a straight-shooting, aspiring actor, who simply uttered the most dull and consistently repeated comment on the set, "If it's not broke, why fix it?" Why fix it? Fix it because your ratings, in your words, "are dwindling." Fix it if for no other reason than the fact that I want African American story lines to relate to me and to flow as smoothly as those of other characters. Fix it Mr. Shaughnessy, because although not broken now, eventually because of all the character growth, and family expansion, the "ethnically tunnel" writing style of the present team, will eventually just mimic that of other daytime shows. Y and R and its cast deserves more. The devoted fans, of all races deserve more.

Mr. Shaughnessy, I applaud your honesty, and the fact that you were so forward about an antiquated style of African American writing, however, you are in a great position to make this change, and I know you feel this is truly the right thing to do. If not simply to soften the corners of your African American dialog, just do it to say you tried something new. As the need has presented itself, I would be happy to forward my resume, as you already know from our conversation, I got the Genoa City family tree and history down.

With all of this new and profound knowledge, I left the set with the comfort of knowing that my idea of a possible coupling of the "perfect" interracial pair was actually heard by the Executive Producer. But sadly, the question that I know is lingering in the minds of Y and R fans across the nation and still remains unanswered. The coupling, is the idea of an affair between Mr. Billy Abbot (the princely son of John and Jill Abbot) and Lily Winters (the princess-like daughter of Neil Winters and Drucilla Barber-Winters), a match made in interracial heaven. The lingering question is of course, "Who is Drucilla's baby's daddy?" Will we ever know? Probably not, but it sure is fun to speculate. And that is what I believe to be the true beauty of this serial, with all of its storylines and characters, there is a consistency that is unparalleled and unsurpassed by any other show on any other network. Happy 30th Birthday Y and R.

Pamper Yourself for Better Health

The Black Voice News

ARA CONTENT

Can a bubble bath reduce your risk of heart disease? Could a manicure ease your asthma symptoms or a soothing massage prevent your next cold? Simple, stress-reducing activities could have a positive impact on your health. Doctors have long known that stress plays a large role in the health and well being of all of us. Chronic stress, in particular, can have long-term effects on your health, contributing to everything from muscle aches and irritable bowel syndrome to an increased risk of stroke and heart disease. "Women are particularly vulnerable to stress-related medical problems. We're taught at an early age to be caregivers and nurturers, except we often forget to care for ourselves," says Dianne Dunkelman, founder and president of Speaking of Women's Health. Speaking of Women's Health is a nonprofit organization dedicated to educating women to make informed decisions about their health, well-being, and personal safety. Wal-Mart, one of the organization's national sponsors, has placed Speaking of Women's Health information centers in all Wal-Mart stores across the country. These information centers feature more than 20 free health and wellness brochures on topics such as nutrition, skin health, heart disease, osteoporosis, balancing career and family, colds and flu, and stress reduction. "Everyone has some stress in their lives and some amount of stress is healthy," says Dunkelman. "It gets us up and out the door in the morning. What we want to help eliminate is the kind of stress that eats away at you over time. It comes from taking care of the needs of everyone else in your life, but ignoring your own." The foundation for a less-stressful life has its roots in the basics of good health -- exercise regularly, eat a healthy diet, and get enough sleep at night. In addition, eliminate or reduce bad habits, such as smoking or overindulging in alcohol. Florence Henderson, national honorary chair of Speaking of Women's Health and co-host of Lifetime's "Speaking of Women's Health" television show that airs on Lifetime TV every Saturday morning at 11:30 a.m. EST & PST, advises women to face their stressors head on. "If there are stressful factors in your life that you can change for the better, then do it," says Henderson, star of stage, screen and television, and everyone's favorite TV Mom. "It might mean making some tough decisions, but the reward is having more control over your emotions, your situation, and your life." Henderson reminds us that many of us have things in our lives that we'd like to change, but for various reasons, we can't. "This is where self-care comes in," she says. "You might not be able to change a difficult situation, but you can do some small things to take care of yourself. 'We're talking about finding ways to celebrate life's simple pleasures on a regular basis -- every day if you can -- to help reduce your stress for better health." Here are some easy, inexpensive ways that Henderson and Dunkelman recommend to pamper yourself: • Treat yourself to some fresh flowers. Keep them on your desk at work or on your nightstand at home. • Buy a new shade of lipstick. • Light candles in your house. Don't save them just for special occasions. • Buy yourself one set of the most sumptuous bath towels you can find. There's nothing more luxurious than using a rich, thick towel after your morning shower, especially if you're getting ready for a busy work day. • Schedule a "Me Day." Plan a day where you do some of the things you may dream about doing during your morning commute to work. Browse in an antique shop. Take a nap in your backyard hammock. Catch an afternoon matinee. • Go to a local department store and get a free makeover at the make-up counter. • Treat yourself to a natural body or facial scrub. Combine it with a scented bubble bath. • Take a walk. • Get a massage and a pedicure. When your feet feel good, you feel good all over. • Another stress relief is connecting with a friend -- take a walk together, make an unscheduled phone call or send a letter or e-mail just to chat. You might consider helping a friend who is stressed by putting together a "pampering" gift basket. "One of our goals is to educate women about the effects of stress on their lives and to get them to start thinking about ways they can make changes -- even small changes -- to lead happier, less-stressful lives," says Dunkelman. "And I'm including myself in that category! 'It's like what the flight attendants say when they advise you to put on your emergency oxygen mask before helping others. You have to take care of yourself first, so you can be better prepared to care for your family and friends," she adds. Speaking of Women's Health is supported on a national level by corporations and foundations including Wal-Mart, P&G, Lifetime Television for Women, Guidant, American Greetings, Ensure, Women's Rogaine, Nicotrol, Kellogg's, Hanes Her Way, and Lean Cuisine. Gospel Showboat Sets Sail August 30th

Life is too short not to experience the wonders and pleasures of God's creation. And, one of those wonders is found directly along the California coastline in Newport Beach.

If you have always wanted to experience a cruise or see the sights of the Newport Beach harbor, then purchase your tickets now for an August 30th voyage of the Gospel Showboat cruising the shores of Newport Beach. Enjoy dinner, meet new friends and be blessed by great gospel entertainment featuring Sherri Bryant while sailing in a luxury yacht. Tickets are $50 per person and space is limited.

The Gospel Showboat will set sail promptly at 6:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m. For more information or to purchase tickets, contact (909) 356-8437.

Dynamic and powerful are only two of the words that describe Sherri Bryant. A native of Florida, Bryant migrated to Southern California after graduating from Arizona State University in 1990. She soon began attending a local fellowship where, for the next six years she served in the young adult ministry, choir, and discipleship training department. She later came to Faith Community Church in West Covina where she further honed her gift of leadership in the singles ministry as praise and worship leader and lending her insight through formal teaching for the group and through one-on-one relationships she cultivated.

Now Bryant is currently serving faithfully in the Music Department as part of the choir and worship team, which allows her the opportunity to express herself musically. Her songwriting, vocal arranging and production gifts can be heard on her newly released CD "I Found the One."

Bryant speaks and sings with an intensity that flows from her own testimony and is fueled by her incessant heart after God. "I Found the One," is a collection of original songs that express Bryant's passion for God and commission to draw others into that same dynamic, life changing relationship.

Congresswoman Waters: Security and Public Safety Must Come First at LAX

Lawmaker Introduces Legislation to Prohibit Construction of a Remote Check-in Facility at Manchester Square Unless It Provides Increased Security, Public Safety

The Black Voice News

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Immediately prior to adjournment of Congress for the August recess, Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA) introduced H.R. 2985, a bill to prohibit construction of a new Ground Transportation Center (GTC), a remote passenger check-in facility at Los Angeles International Airport (LAX), unless it has been determined that such a facility would improve the safety and security of the public.

"The safety and security of LAX is an issue of tremendous importance to me and the people I represent," said Congresswoman Waters. "I am deeply concerned that the proposed GTC at Manchester Square will actually make the airport less secure than it is now."

Supporters of Los Angeles Mayor James Hahn's $9.6 billion LAX modernization plan claim the proposed GTC will improve airport security and make LAX less vulnerable to terrorist attacks. However, a recent study by the RAND Corporation concluded that reconfiguring LAX will do nothing to improve public safety; it will only relocate the target of an attack to the remote check-in facility.

"According to the Rand Study, passengers and airport personnel would be more vulnerable to terrorist attacks because of the concentration of passengers at the GTC," Waters explained. "Moreover, the study found that by consolidating passengers and vehicles at a check-in center a mile from the airport, the mayor's plan could greatly increase the number of casualties that result from firearms or small bombs concealed in luggage if such attacks were to occur."

Waters' bill would prohibit the construction of the GTC

unless there is a determination that such a remote check-in facility will, in fact, improve public safety and security. The bill would require a review of the proposed facility by the Department of Homeland Security prior to its construction. If the Secretary of Homeland Security determines that the facility will not protect the safety and security of air passengers and the general public more effectively than the existing facilities at LAX, the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) would not be allowed to approve its construction.

"LAX is the third largest airport in the United States and a potential target for terrorists," said the Congresswoman. "I will not support an LAX modernization project that compromises public safety and security."

On July 23, 2003, Congresswoman Waters sent letters to the Chairman and Ranking Member of the House Appropriations Committee to request that the Transportation-Treasury Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2004 include a provision to condition the construction of the proposed remote passenger check-in facility on a security determination. On the same day, she sent letters to the Chairman and Ranking Member of the House Transportation Committee to request that the conference report for H.R. 2115, the FAA Reauthorization Act, include a comparable provision.

"Security must come first," Waters said. "I will continue to use every available opportunity provided by the legislative process to ensure that this controversial LAX expansion project does not compromise the safety and security of LAX and the surrounding community."

SCE Says Stay Cool and Healthy on Hot Summer Days

The Black Voice News

ROSEMEAD

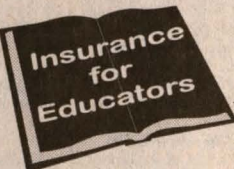

Warning that prolonged periods of excessive heat can jeopardize your health and life, Southern California Edison (SCE) is reminding customers to take extra precautions to avoid heat-related hazards when temperatures rise.

"Customers shouldn't put themselves at risk for heat stroke because of concerns over high electricity bills," said Suzanne Middelburg SCE's manager of consumer affairs. "We have a variety of special rate programs for qualified customers that can help them manage their electric bills while remaining comfortable on hot summer days."

Income-qualified residential customers can apply for California Alternate Rates for Energy (CARE), which offers a 20% discount on electric bills. SCE's Medical Baseline program offers additional discounts to customers with qualifying medical conditions and to those who use electric medical support equipment.

To avoid heat stroke, SCE offers the following hot-weather safety tips:

- The severity of heat disorders tends to increase with age-heat cramps in a 17-year-old may be heat exhaustion in someone who is 40, and a potentially lethal heat stroke in a person over 60.
- Elderly persons, small children, invalids and those on certain medications are particularly susceptible to hot temperatures and heat stroke.
- Strenuous activities should be reduced, eliminated or rescheduled for the coolest part of the day.
- Dress in lightweight, light-colored clothing since it reflects heat and sunlight, and helps our body maintain normal temperature.
- Drink plenty of water or other non-alcoholic fluids.
- Spend time in an air-conditioned building or home to reduce the risk of heat stroke.

Hancock and Hutcherson are Monterey Jazz Hot Tickets

By Taylor Jordan

Officials of the 46th annual Monterey Jazz Festival know the best way to keep all arena fans in their seats until the final note is played at the three-day musical event. Schedule pianist/producer/composer Herbie Hancock and vibraphonist great Bobby Hutcherson as the closing Sunday night artists.

No one but the totally insane would leave the Monterey County fairgrounds before the festival on Sept. 19, 20 and 21 ends and miss a chance to see the two legends in their own time.

And since the sane will remain, they will also enjoy a weekend packed with the music that put America at the top of the world's culturally creative list.

Hancock and Hutcherson are hard acts to follow, so it is particularly fitting they close the five concerts on the arena's Jimmy Lyons Stage. There can be no doubt that their dual performance, with Hancock as ensemble leader and Hutcherson as his "very special" guest, will be exhilarating, uniquely rhythmic and perfectly blend the best of jazz expressions.

Although Hutcherson was inspired to become a vibraphonist when he heard Milt "Bags" Jackson, probably the best vibraphonist of all jazz times, his style is hardly typical of the Modern Jazz Quartet vibes artist's lyrically lilting and melodic sweetness. He plays a ballad with the best, but magical things traditionally leap off when he moves into high-energy, physically demanding and rhythmically challenging licks.

Hutcherson's edge-of-your-seat playing has captured the hearts of fans and respect of instrumental peers worldwide. His musical partners include pristine and unequivocally notable pioneers: Hancock, Charles Lloyd, Al Grey, Billy Mitchell, Jackie McLean, Hank Mobley, Eric Dolphy, Dexter Gordon, Chick Corea, Cedar Walton, Billy Higgins, Harold Land Sr.

He's such a formidable but friendly personality that he didn't have to play a note in the critically acclaimed film "Round Midnight" to be remembered. His character cooked red beans and rice and soulful staples of home for the American musicians performing and living as ex-patriates in Europe.

Hancock achieved popularity among Monterey Jazz Festival and international audiences for his unwillingness to stay in one place or style. He constantly morphs and evolves into new musical expressions as a pianist, producer and composer continually cutting and moving the instrumental edge.

Musically dexterous, Hancock began as a classical pianist and soloed with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra as an 11-year-old child prodigy. Possessing a balanced blend of left-brain, right-brain talents, he majored in electronic engineering at Grinnell College before music claimed his career path. Legendary trumpeter Donald

Vibraphonist great Bobby Hutcherson

Byrd discovered and mentored him into jazz, hiring Hancock as a sideman in his New York group.

He signed with Blue Note Records in 1960, first stepped on the international ladder with his classic composition "Watermelon Man," began a five-year association with Miles Davis as a sizzling sideman and composer, immersed himself in electronic music for the 1960s' decade and continued to evolve as a seminal figure in jazz as he broke ground in video and synthesized experimentation, interactive electronics, world music and memorable artistry.

Hancock's skills as a composer and pianist have frequently been simultaneously presented. This was particularly true with his 2001 Monterey Jazz Festival debut of "Directions In Music." This tribute to John

Herbie Hancock

Coltrane and Miles Davis featured the talents of trumpeter Roy Hargrove, drummer Brian Blade, bassist John Patitucci and saxophonist Michael Brecker and sept the MJF audience to a spontaneous standing ovation for Brecker's sizzling sax solo.

Hancock, who also played piano and acted in the film, won an Oscar for scoring "Round Midnight."

Topping Monterey's main arena artists list are song stylist Nnenna Freelon; vocalese great Jon Hendricks as the leader of "Four Brothers" with singers Kurt Elling, Mark Murphy and Kevin Mahogany; the Clayton-Hamilton Orchestra featuring bassist John Clayton, drummer Jeff Hamilton and saxophonist Jeff Clayton; all the Neville Brothers - Aaron, Cyril, Arthur, and Charles; Afro-Cuban and salsa singer Isaac Delgado; virtuoso pianist Michel Camilo; The Crusaders with guest vocalist Randy Crawford; New Orleans' musicians Buckwheat Zydeco and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band and fusion guitarist John McLaughlin with India tabla player Zakir Hussain.

Weekend highlights include the arena debut of trumpeter Dave Douglas, the 2003 commissioned composition "Traditions and Commissions" to be presented by acoustic guitarist Ralph Towner and vibraphonist Gary Burton and the screening of "Piano Blues," a new film by producer, director and jazz aficionado Clint Eastwood. The movie, executive produced by Martin Scorsese, is one of seven films in the Public Broadcasting System's "The Blues" series.

John and Jeff Clayton and Gary Burton will be the weekend's artists-in-residence and Ralph Towner will be the showcase artist. All will make multiple appearances on the arena and free ground stages.

Besides tickets to the five arena concerts, jazz fans may purchase grounds-only tickets - $25 for Friday, $35 each for Saturday and Sunday or $80 for a three-day pass - for entertainment at Dizzy's Den, the nightclub, garden and courtyard stages, the coffee house gallery and jazz theater.

The WNBA's two most consistent teams tossed it up again Monday evening in a season finale well worth the wait. The Sparks, having already wrapped up the division title and sporting a three game lead could have easily mailed this one in.

"No way" said Coach Michelle Cooper with a grin. "This game meant a lot to us, we needed and wanted to win. We have some tough games ahead of us and we needed to start getting tough right here.

The Sparks Mawadi Mabika hit three of four free throw attempts down the stretch to seal the victory in what had to be on of the most physical contests of the year. "I think they have trouble guarding us (off the dribble) and that's why the game got so physical" said Mawadi Mabika who finished with 19 points.

"We had chances to win" muttered the Comets fiery center Michelle Snow. We had the chances, but sometimes you just don't make them. The Comets not only had chances to win but also appeared to be well on their way to a season ending win over their rivals from the West.

The game was a seesaw contest with both teams amassing and eventually losing a 10 point lead. With the Comets leading by 10 in the second half, the 10,118 screaming Sparks fans were feeling a bit nervous.

As if leaping from a telephone booth, Tameka Dixon scored 6 points and handed out 2 assists in a little over 4 minutes, including a driving reverse bounce pass to Mwadi Mabika that brought the crowd to its feet. "We've played together a long time, we know each other's game" said Dixon when asked about the play of the night. Dixon finished with 19 points to match Mabika for high scoring honors.

Lisa Leslie was held to just 8 points after scoring a season high 31 points on Saturday against San Antonio. Leslie's 14 rebounds made up for her single figure scoring. All-star point guard Nikke Teasley finished with 6 points and 2 assists. DeLisha Milton had 15 points and 2 rebounds. "We're working toward the top (of our games) Everybody's doing their jobs and we're playing better" Said Milton about their effort.

The Sparks victory served notice should the teams meet again in the conference finals. The Comets have lost five of their last six games and are limping into the playoffs with lots of uncertainty. Most telling is their inability to score at times. Teams have learned how to defend Swoopes and forced the Comets to look elsewhere for scoring. Usually that comes from all-star Tina Thompson who matched Dixon and Mabika with 19 points also. Talented center Michelle Snow is capable of delivering but has often struggled against the Sparks.

With Lisa Leslie's healthy return, The two-time defending champion Sparks are the most talented team in the WNBA. That's not to say that the Sparks are assured smooth sailing all the way to the championship. The champs have lost two of their big people, forward Latesha Byers and Center Rhonda Mapp. Longtime Sparks fans will remember that was one of the team's weaknesses before becoming champions. Both Byers and Mapp were brought in to assist Lisa in the paint.

The Champs are short handed and a little banged up, but with an opportunity to match the Lakers three-peat you can bet the Sparks will accept nothing less than another banner hanging in Staples Center.

The Sparks will open their title defense tonight, in Minnesota against the Links and Katie Smith, the league's 5th leading scorer. Game two will be at Staples on Saturday.
